Wanted: Stiffer penalties for careless drivers

TORONTO'S DEADLY STREETS

MPP proposes maximum two years in jail, $2K-$50K fine

May Warren
Metro | Toronto

It's time for stiffer penalties for careless drivers who seriously hurt or kill people, one MPP is saying.

Burlington's Eleanor McMahon is proposing a maximum of two years in jail, and a fine of between $2,000 and $50,000, in a private member's bill.

"A lot of times (a) case will go to court and families walk away feeling as though, 'Wow, this fellow killed my aunt and all he got was a $500 fine,'" she said.

"What I'm doing is acknowledging that."

Metro has been tracking pedestrian and cyclist deaths in Toronto.

So far there have been 16 this year.

Under the current catch-all careless driving category, motorists face a maximum of 6 months in jail and between a $400 and $2,000 fine, whether they killed someone or not.

McMahon's own husband, an OPP sergeant, died when a trucker struck him on his bike outside of Milton.

"It was 10 years on Monday and I have to tell you it feels sometimes like it was yesterday," McMahon said.

"So I really relate to those families who are feeling as though there hasn't been the kind of closure and the kind of recognition of their loss."

Patrick Brown, a Toronto lawyer who works on cycling injury cases, has done his own analysis of cases where people were killed or seriously hurt by drivers.

He said unless drivers are drunk or involved in a hit and run, they don't usually get jail time, and walk away with "meagre" fines.

"The cost to fix the dent on the car that killed the person is likely going to cost more than the actual fine that person has to pay," he said.

Good news if you want an electric car. You'll be able to get a rebate (up to $14,000 per vehicle) for buying or leasing an electric vehicle until 2020, and up to $1,000 per home charging station until 2020.

You can also get money for replacing your old exhaust-spewing car with a hybrid or electric vehicle.

Telecommute to save the planet: The plan wants to provide more opportunities for civil servants to work from home so they're not clogging roads, as well as grants for companies and cities to encourage telecommuting and flex-work schedules.

People who want to charge their electric vehicles at home will also get a rebate on their hydro bills that makes charging free.

Building codes for homes and offices are changing to make it mandatory for new ones to have electric car charging stations.

The bad news: Your gas bill is going up. The plan will be paid for by proceeds from the cap-and-trade system, which the province joined in April 2015. As a result, the average monthly natural gas bill will go up by $5, and the average monthly household energy cost will go up by $13.

The government wants to protect renters (who can't control the heating systems in their homes) from the price of carbon. The document says "legislature and/or regulatory change" will be looked at.

■ The province pledges to build better cycling networks for commuters and more bike parking but is short on details.

Gas prices at the pumps will also rise next January by 4.3 cents a litre.

Deli takes to truck after landlord locks them out

SMOKED MEAT SAGA

Caplansky's brings 4-wheel reinforcements to College St.

Faced with a locked-down deli and forced to turn away a hungry crowd of smoked-meat sandwich seekers, Caplansky's Deli took to the streets Wednesday afternoon to give the people what they wanted.

Deli spokesperson Cody Kitchener said the decision was made to open up the local chain's food truck — a blue step van spotted with dill pickle decals — “so people can still come by and get a sandwich.”

The popular establishment at College and Bathurst has been closed after its lease was terminated, “effective immediately,” sometime Monday night because of a failure “to effect repairs not (sic) authorized by the landlord” under the Commercial Tenancies Act.

fledged kitchen to a lunch wagon required staff to modify the old-school Jewish deli's menu. As a result, the cash-only sidewalk-bound operation featured the restaurant's “greatest hits” instead.

Unsurprisingly, the signature smoked meat sandwiches remained a top seller.

Caplansky said on Tuesday he had no idea what repairs his landlord is referring to.

Kitchener echoed that, saying news that the lease had been terminated “came as a complete shock.”

“I was baffled ... we have a lot of staff members here who have been here for a long time,” he said. “They want to come to work. They have bills to pay.”

A metal chain could be seen wrapped around the interior handles of a side door on Wednesday afternoon. Kitchener added that the restaurant's locks had also been changed.

Of small comfort was the fact the diner's lights remained on, which Kitchener reasoned meant the fridges were still receiving power. Still, he feared some supplies wouldn't last much longer.

Kitchener declined to speculate when or if the restaurant will reopen, saying Caplansky and the landlord were “talking through lawyers right now.”

He said the food truck was a temporary fix and would only be open for business outside the College Street deli from noon to around 4 p.m. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

City may license landlords

In what's being hailed a major win for tenants, city council has approved the next step toward licensing landlords. It's a move advocates say will lead to better adherence to building standards and improve the quality of life of the half of Toronto's residents who live in apartments.

Despite earlier pushback to the idea said to be emanating from the mayor's office, a large majority of councillors agreed to go ahead with public consultations, as staff had recommended.

The vote was 33-6, with Councillors John Campbell, Christin Carmichael Greb, Stephen Holyday, Giorgio Mammoliti, Denzil Minnan-Wong and James Pasternak voting against.

City staff have proposed that licensing would apply to 3,300 apartment buildings that are three storeys or higher, with 10 units or more. Information would be made available to prospective and existing tenants as part of a proactive approach to ensuring that building standards are maintained.

The vote came after an earlier fight at the licensing committee, where Mayor John Tory's office was accused of trying to sideline the item. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

CRIME

Murder victim kicked out of Raps game

The victim of Tuesday's daylight slaying near Yonge and Eglinton was an alleged cocaine dealer in the GTA with gangland connections in British Columbia.

Sohan Deo confirmed that his nephew Sukh Deo, 34, was shot repeatedly in an alley on Tuesday as 18 bullets shattered the window of the parked Range Rover where he sat.

Toronto police had charged him in October 2013 with cocaine trafficking and possession of property obtained by crime, and he was seven months away from a trial in Ontario Superior Court, court records show.

Sukh's lawyer, Michael Lacy, said he had “intended to plead not guilty” to the allegations.

Just weeks before his death, Sukh had an unlikely moment in the spotlight. Hundreds of thousands of basketball fans watched him get ejected, on camera, for heckling referees at the Raptors' May 23 playoff game in Toronto against the Cleveland Cavaliers, said Gurpreet Sahota, editor of the Punjabi weekly newspapers Akal Guardian and Charhdi Kala in Surrey, B.C.

An amped-up Sukh, dressed in a dark top and blue jeans, can be seen leaving his courtside seat at the Air Canada Centre, gesticulating in protest as officials point the way out. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Mayor, chief short on gun answers

City leaders admit there are no simple solutions to stop Toronto's recent surge in gun violence, which has claimed 21 lives so far in 2016.

“There is no magic wand on this,” Mayor John Tory told a news conference Wednesday flanked by several councillors.

“Toronto is not alone with this particular problem right now,” Chief Mark Saunders said at a separate media event. “There is no one solution or one cause for it.”

Saunders said police already deploy officers into high-risk areas. “It's not like we aren't doing anything,” he said.

Midtown fights for its identity

DEVELOPMENT

Business owners band together as condos boom

Steven Goetz
For Metro | Toronto

As the condo boom that's pushing businesses off downtown Yonge Street quickly moves north, business owners in midtown are banding together to protect the main drag's character.

There's a sense of urgency for the stretch of Yonge that runs south from Soudan Avenue to the old Belt Line Railway crossing and serves clientele from areas such as Chaplin Estates and Davisville Village.

The sidewalk patios, small cafés and busy bistros that define the area must be preserved, said Midtown Yonge BIA chair Jennifer Gittins.

"We're the forgotten neighbourhood that the developers have now found," Gittins said. "It's a huge fear with the condos being built that all we'll have are banks and businesses that bring no life to the street."

And, beyond that, it needs its own identity — something that's being accomplished with plans for street signage and special wraps around lampposts. There's even a slogan: Meet in the Middle.

With $47,500 from the city, the BIA hired Plant Architects — the firm behind the Nathan Phillips Square revitalization — to find opportunities to make the streetscape more inviting and give it a sense of identity.

"It won't just be a bunch of benches," Gittins said.

And the BIA has approached Freed Developments, whose proposed 28- and 12-storey condo development is scheduled to open in 2019, to express the merchants' desire to maintain the street's character.

Ward 22 Coun. Josh Matlow, who initiated the BIA's formation, told Metro it takes people like Gittins to step up and make sure merchants' interests are heard during planning.

"Far too many main streets are being affected by developments that care more for reaching the sky than what happens at (street level)," Matlow said.

"There is a sense of teamwork and a recognition from merchants that the more animated, beautiful, vibrant Yonge Street is, the better our community is."

T.O. also floats idea of free Hip show

Great minds think alike: councillors from both Mississauga and Toronto have each proposed that their respective municipality host a free Tragically Hip show this summer.

The solution, suggested by Toronto's Josh Colle and Mississauga's Nando Iannicca, would help alleviate the tragic ticket shortage plaguing the band's summer tour.

Colle, who counts himself among the Hip's legion of fans, told the Star the federally operated Downsview Park, which has hosted as many as 450,000 for bands such as the Rolling Stones, provides the perfect venue.

"It would just be a really fantastic opportunity to let everyone thank, celebrate the Tragically Hip and what they've meant to the city and to Canada and to all our music lives," Colle said.

He's asked York Centre MP Michael Levitt to get on board and help push the proposal through.

"I've been in touch with Councillor Colle. We are both big Hip fans and it would be great to have them play at Downsview Park for their Toronto fans," Levitt told the Star in an email. "I hope it is a possibility; that of course is a decision for the band's management to consider."

Colle reached out to the Hip's management and promoter on Wednesday with his idea. The band's management has yet to respond to questions from the Star about whether either concert might happen.

Just next door in Mississauga,

Iannicca floated his proposal for a free show during Wednesday's council meeting.

Ever since learning of Downie's diagnosis, fans have been clamouring for tickets to one in a series of concerts announced by the band, for one last chance to say goodbye to the Canadian icon.

But within moments of going on sale, scalpers scooped up nearly all the available tickets, which are now being resold at exorbitant prices. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Mississauga aims to host the Hip

GORD DOWNIE

Councillor floats idea but has not spoken with band yet

Forget all the talk of evil web bots and ticket scalpers; the City of Mississauga wants to put on a free Tragically Hip show for as many as 30,000 fans.

"Wow, I wasn't prepared for that one," said acting mayor Chris Fonseca, after Councillor Nando Iannicca proposed the idea at Wednesday's council meeting.

If the plan flies, the free show, with all costs for the band and fans covered by the city, would be held at downtown's Celebration Square. Iannicca's proposal was received by council and now city staff will explore whether it can work.

Iannicca said the aim is to "honour" lead singer Gord Downie, who was recently diagnosed with incurable brain cancer, and the band's fans.

After tickets for the Hip's summer Man Machine Poem tour were sold out in minutes, the band added four more shows, but tickets that had been snatched up by re-sellers began appearing on secondary markets for prices far beyond face value. Iannicca said the free concert would give thousands of fans the chance to see Downie and the Hip one last time.

The band's management was contacted by the Star to see if the idea might happen, but it has not yet responded.

"If they would like to do it, we would be totally honoured to make that happen," said Councillor Jim Tovey, after Wednesday's meeting.

Iannicca, a longtime Mississauga councillor with deep ties to the city's business community, said he would "personally" pull all the fundraising together to make it happen.

"Celebration Square staff are discussing this exciting opportunity with Councillor Iannicca," said Paul Mitcham, head of community services for the city. "We intend to get in touch with the Tragically Hip after just hearing the discussion at council this morning."

Councillor George Carlson said he would love to see Downie and the band one last time. "That would be tragically awesome." TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

79-year-old is first in family to finish post-secondary

Gilbert Ngabo
Metro | Toronto

At 79, he might look like a proud grandfather beaming with pride at the University of Toronto's convocation ceremony.

But Clive Davies earned the right to be there as a graduate. It just took him a long time.

This Friday, Davies will don the graduation gown, enter the convocation hall and walk up the stage to receive his history degree, becoming the first of his family to ever complete a post-secondary education program.

"It took me more than 30 years to get here," said the Toronto resident, finally able to joke about his sporadic university course journey he started in 1978. "I first had to take the north of England, and his family moved to Venezuela right after the Second World War. That's where Davies and his sister attended elementary school, while his father worked as a welder.

They moved back in England, right in time for him to start national service in the air force, before joining the police force. He moved to Canada in 1964, and enlisted in the police service three years later. It was a career path he'd keep until he retired in 1994.

Going back to school on a full-time basis presented its own challenges, not least of which is having classmates who are 50 years younger.

"You need a fair amount of patience," he said, noting it took him a while to adapt to the pace of technology, like organizing group work via social media or doing research on smartphones. But age was also an advantage.

"I think professors treated me more as an equal, not a student," he said.

Davies said he feels a tremendous amount of gratitude towards people who supported him, and it'll be a moment to remember when his name gets called.

"Nothing humble about me. I'm going to be very proud of myself," he said.

Emerging and young artists in Regent Park show their flair

Gilbert Ngabo
 Metro | Toronto

Daniels Spectrum in Regent Park is buzzing with youth-led artistic projects heading into this weekend.

There are paintings, murals, photographs, theatre, drawings, music and mixed media, and it's all part of the VIBE Arts Fest, celebrating and supporting the voices of young and emerging artists from Toronto's diverse communities. "We basically want to allow these artists to unleash their inner childhood and just have fun with colour, live-thinking and creativity," said festival director Nina Escalante.

Dozens of youth — from Grade 1 students to 23-year-olds — are participating in VIBE Arts' emerging artists program, sharpening their artistic talents.

Some participants from the program were also behind the This Is Why We Play campaign, which created murals on subway stations across the city during last winter's NBA All-Star festivities.

With the theme of identity, artists were able to tap into their cultural backgrounds to showcase what sets them apart.

From visual art exhibits, kids showcased things as simple as natural parks or as abstract as faith and race. The festival will also include performances such as Bollywood dances, aboriginal drumming, hip hop and African dances.

"It's about how all artists bring who they are into their work," said Escalante. "We believe it is in showcasing the individuality of artists of all ages together that we create special and strong communities."

The festival runs at Aki Studio (585 Dundas East) from Wednesday to Saturday.

"We basically want to allow these artists to unleash their inner childhood."

DIVERSITY

How to be an ally when it counts

It's time to be an ally.

Inequality and oppression in Toronto are being targeted by activists at the Centre for Social Innovation, who are aiming to come up with strategies to combat them.

Through a series of workshops dubbed "How to be an Ally: Anti-Oppression 101" that kick off next week, organizers hope to take conversations about equality to a higher level.

"It's a fact that we're not all treated the same, and that means unequal opportunities in life," said Shilbee Kim, one of the workshops' organizers. Toronto may be seen as a multicultural and diverse city but there's a need to look more critically at racism, she said.

"We really need to understand that we do live in a broken system," she said.

Kim pointed to anecdotes about prison population — where people of colour and aboriginals tend to have higher numbers — and racial imbalance in higher political and institutional positions as examples of the "unfair system."

"Even in social missions and poverty alleviation, you'll see white executive directors servicing people of colour," she said.

Many people want to be allies with those oppressed or marginalized, but sometimes don't know how, said Kim.

Senate votes to remove near-death requirement from assisted dying bill

The Senate voted Wednesday to allow suffering Canadians who are not near death to seek medical help to end their lives. Senators voted 41-30 to amend Bill C-14, deleting the requirement that a person's natural death must be "reasonably foreseeable."

INFRASTRUCTURE

City reels as road falls away, piece by piece

Joe Lofaro & Lucy Scholey
Metro | Ottawa

Andre Da Costa knew something was wrong when the power went out in his building Wednesday morning.

But it wasn't until he rushed outside that he realized a cavernous sinkhole had engulfed a huge chunk of Rideau Street, creating confusion and chaos in the heart of downtown Ottawa.

"The police and firefighters are telling us to get back, get back, get back," Da Costa said.

Piece by piece, the road fell away until the sinkhole spanned nearly the entire width of Rideau Street, just down the road from the Parliament buildings.

A van parked on the road fell into the hole, a moment captured on a bystander's phone and shared on social media. Da Costa saw it happen before his eyes.

"There's some smoke or some dust or water spray coming up out of the sinkhole and then the roadway starts giving away," he said. "There was a minivan parked on that loading zone and then that started to tip and then fell into the sinkhole."

The city is now left searching for answers. Officials at a news conference Wednesday afternoon could not immediately say if crews excavating the last 50-odd metres of the light-rail line had anything to do with the street's collapse.

FORT MCMURRAY WILDFIRE

Wanted: A home for exotic evacuees

Alex Boyd
Metro | Edmonton

Lizards, bearded dragons and snakes, oh my.

The Edmonton Humane Society is currently home for 65 animals rescued from Fort McMurray. Most of their owners are AWOL and most of the pets are exotic.

Society chief executive, Miranda Jordan-Smith, said while her staff has been able to obtain contact information for some owners, using the addresses where the animals were found, they currently have no way of reaching the owners of about two thirds of the new animals.

So, if you're still hoping for a joyful reunion with your ball python, red-bellied newt or tarantula, she'd love if you could get in touch.

"We don't normally see this volume, so it is pretty unusual to have this sheer number of exotic animals," Jordan-Smith said.

While the Society has found food and shelter for all its new guests, Jordan-Smith said it's been an adjustment for a team accustomed to tending cats and rabbits.

"It's definitely a change in menu," she said. "Some of the snakes require frozen mice, crickets need to be fed to certain reptiles, and the veterinary rounds have changed as well."

When the human residents of Fort McMurray evacuated, the Alberta SPCA went around to rescue as many pets as possible. They brought the animals to Edmonton, where they were distributed to different rescue groups for safekeeping.

Having a large, well-equipped facility, the Humane Society stepped up to take the exotics.

They initially were dealing with about 200 of them and carved out three separate areas within the shelter for their new tenants, whose care has been overseen by veterinarians and vet techs.

While Jordan-Smith admits she's not exactly a snake person, she said her staff has been excited about the challenge of new species.

Sanders soldiers on

U.S. ELECTION

He's been clobbered in campaign, but he won't quit

America's self-styled political revolutionary remains on the battlefield after losing the war to Hillary Clinton.

Bernie Sanders isn't ready to go.

He's lost a majority of states in the Democratic primaries, the popular vote, elected delegates and unelected superdelegates, and has been clobbered in the biggest remaining states.

But an electric energy rippled through his youthful crowd as he declared his intention to march on — at least to the final primary next week in Washington, D.C., then perhaps to next month's Democratic convention.

Sanders is said to be feeling combative, is bitter about how he's been treated by the Democratic party and is brushing aside staffers who are insisting on the need for party unity, according to a story published by the web outlet Politico.

"The struggle continues," the senator told a California crowd. "I am pretty good at arithmetic."

ic. I know that the fight in front of us is a very, very steep fight. But we will continue to fight for every vote and every delegate."

Bernie Sanders.

AFP/GETTY IMAGES

The sound of the crowd hinted at Democratic disunity.

While his supporters cheered his reference to stopping Republican Donald Trump, they cheered even longer and louder when he described his campaign as something greater than defeating Trump — it's about transforming the country with a platform of more social programs and less money in politics.

On the very night she made history as the first female presidential nominee of a major U.S. party, a Democratic audience jeered Sanders' reference to receiving a gracious phone call from her.

Sanders raised his hands in a half-hearted effort to silence the boos.

His battlefield exit strategy could start taking shape Thursday. THE CANADIAN PRESS

SCIENCE

Ancient 'hobbits' older than believed

Human evolution is usually portrayed as a neat linear progression, from hunched primate to tall, proud man. In 2003, a discovery on the Indonesian island of Flores scrambled that narrative.

In a cave called Liang Bua, researchers found the nearly complete skeleton of a tiny human who lived between 50,000 and 100,000 years ago, and who stood just over a metre high. They declared it a new species, officially called Homo floresiensis, but quickly nicknamed the "hobbit" hominin. But almost everything about these extinct people was a mystery. Where did they come from, and how did they get there?

On Wednesday, researchers writing in the journal Nature announced they had discovered much older, even tinier human fossils on Flores.

The 700,000-year-old remains are helping scientists understand the origins of one of the most enigmatic members of our genus.

"These guys survived there for 650,000 years or so, which is quite amazing," said Bence Viola, a professor of paleoanthropology at the University of Toronto, who was not involved in the research.

The research team found the new fossils in 2014 at a site called Mata Menge, which sits more than 70 kilometres away from the Liang Bua cave.

In a layer of sediment that dates to 700,000 years ago and also contained stone tools and fossils of several animals, the researchers discovered a jaw fragment and teeth belonging to at least three individuals. Amazingly, the jaw was 20 per cent smaller than the smallest jaw from Liang Bua.

The research team was careful to say that until more specimens are discovered, they can't say for sure if these even tinier people are the direct ancestors of Homo floresiensis. But the discovery helps resolve some of the arguments about the hobbits' origins. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

SYRIA

Thousands flee in push to liberate Aleppo

Thousands of civilians fled a northern Syrian town Wednesday in anticipation of a final push by U.S.-backed forces to liberate it from Daesh rule, as airstrikes pounded rebel-held districts in Aleppo, killing 15 civilians and damaging three hospitals, opposition activists and a UN agency said.

The Syrian Democratic Forces have all but encircled Manbij, a key waypoint on a Daesh supply line between the Turkish border and the extremist group's de facto capital, Raqqa.

Nasser Haj Mansour said Daesh was allowing families to flee the town to nearby Jarablus and al-Bab. Some civilians fled to liberated villages and to the advancing forces, the adviser told the AP by messaging service from his position near the front line. He estimated some 15,000 civilians had fled.

The SDF have retaken some 70 villages and farms from Daesh militants in their campaign, which is now entering its tenth day, according to the Britain-based Syrian Observatory for Human Rights. The Kurdish-led force has advanced under the cover of U.S.-led airstrikes, and the U.S. has embedded 300 Special Forces troops with it, though Washington says they are there in an advisory capacity.

Feds open study of housing market

REAL ESTATE

Examination focuses on affordability, foreign buyers

The federal government is conducting an in-depth examination of the country's real estate markets as it decides whether more changes are needed to rein in escalating prices or curb the impact of foreign investment on housing affordability, Finance Minister Bill Morneau said Wednesday.

"What we're doing right now is we're making sure that we have a deep dive into the information to ensure that any considerations we have for change are evidence-based," Morneau said after giving a speech at an economic conference in Toronto.

"Our ongoing goal is to ensure that we understand the market in all of its complexity, that we consider all the evidence to determine what measures are necessary, on an ongoing basis, to ensure that Canadians have the ability to buy homes."

The government has faced growing calls from researchers, bankers and other housing sector observers in recent days to address soaring prices and mounting household debt, particularly in Toronto and Vancouver.

Morneau did not specify Wednesday what sort of changes the government was considering for the future.

The government is looking at a number of factors affecting the real estate industry, such as population growth, the labour market and supply, Morneau said.

"We're going to remain focused on this, using real evidence to think about what are the measures that we can do in order to ensure that this market stays healthy for Canadians," Morneau said.

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau is scheduled to address The Economist's Canada Summit later Wednesday.

The summit is aimed at identifying the key trends that are reshaping Canada's role in the global economy while delving into ways the country can become more competitive.

TECHNOLOGY

Herders hope app will save reindeer

Finnish reindeer herders in the Arctic have painted Rudolph's antlers in fluorescent colours, hung reflectors around their necks and even used movable traffic signs, but none of the efforts have helped reduce the annual 4,000 reindeer road deaths.

Now they have decided on a new tactic: an interactive reindeer warning app where drivers can tap their mobile phone screens to register any reindeer they see and get warnings if they are approaching an area where reindeer have been spotted.

In a pilot project, drivers of heavy transport vehicles are being given 1,000 free handsets, which have been deactivated for any other use than the reindeer warning system. If it proves successful, the app will be available for download on smartphones later this year.

Anne Ollila, director of the Finnish Reindeer Herders' Association, said Wednesday the other methods didn't work.

"Drivers often mistook reindeer with reflectors for people in the dark, thinking they wouldn't run into the middle of the road when they saw car headlights approaching," she told The Associated Press. "And the deer would tear the reflectors off."

Reindeer traffic warning signs were pinched by tourists for souvenirs, and reindeer would scrape off the fluorescent paint from their antlers. "Somehow the reindeer know they had paint on their antlers. Maybe their friends laughed at them," Ollila said.

Reindeer husbandry provides work for some 10,000 people in the region. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHANTAL HÉBERT ON THE TROUBLE WITH PLEBISCITES

The option of a national referendum is a can of worms that any moderately sane government would think twice before opening.

Canada's current referendum law was conceived in haste, in the heat of a losing constitutional battle almost 25 years ago. It was not designed to bring plebiscites into the electoral culture of the country. So many of its key sections are obsolete that it would have to be rewritten before Canada could have another nationwide referendum.

The Conservatives want such a vote to be a pre-condition to the adoption of the new voting system the Liberals promised to put in place in time for the 2019 election.

If one had to sum up the government's mantra, it would be a referendum on electoral reform if necessary but not necessarily a referendum — with an emphasis on the latter part.

But this is one issue that finds Prime Minister Justin Trudeau offside with public opinion. An Ipsos poll conducted for Global News last month pegged support for a referendum on electoral reform at 73 per cent.

And yet, if it came to that, the debate over a referendum could turn out to be more time-consuming and potentially more divisive than the electoral reform discussion itself.

The existing federal referendum law was passed in the spring of 1992 after barely a month of deliberations in the House of Commons. These days it can take that long just to get a motion to set up a committee adopted.

Although it was Brian Mulroney's Tory government that presented the bill, part of the context other than a vote on a proposed amendment to the Constitution.

On this, both sides are really arguing about the number of angels that could dance on the head of a rusty pin.

DECISION POINT Former prime minister Pierre Trudeau casts his ballot for the referendum on the Charlottetown Accord in October 1992. ADRIAN WYLD/THE CANADIAN PRESS impetus for it came from the Liberal opposition.

In an interview with the Star this week, Trudeau maintained that a referendum is too blunt an instrument to do justice to complex reforms. There was a time when his party believed otherwise.

As leader of the opposition, Jean Chrétien championed the notion of putting a constitutional package infinitely more complex than any electoral plan could ever be to a national referendum.

The 1992 law was drafted for the specific purpose of consulting Canadians on constitutional changes. There are contrary views within the legal community as to whether it could be used in a

In 1992, Canada's political system still tapped the rich vein of corporate Canada for money. In the Charlottetown referendum campaign, the big banks and the pharmaceutical industry gave big bucks to the Yes camp. Such contributions have since been banned from the federal system. The referendum law is irremediably out-of-synch with 2016 political financing practices.

And 25 years ago, there was no debate as to what constituted a "clear" referendum mandate. Fifty per cent plus one was the accepted figure. That changed after the 1995 Quebec referendum and a Supreme Court reference that suggested the threshold should be higher. Today, there is no consensus among the federal parties as to what constitutes a "clear" majority. The Liberals, under Trudeau, have consistently maintained that it is more than 50 per cent plus one.

The law is also silent on the regional makeup — if any — of a pan-Canadian majority. After a yes vote to the 1992 Charlottetown accord, the amending formula of the Constitution would have kicked in. Thus, even if an overall majority of Canadians had supported the accord, the national total would have had to minimally include a majority of voters in at least seven provinces including Quebec or Ontario for most of its dispositions to be implemented. It is unlikely that a premier would have signed off on a constitutional deal in the face of the opposition of a majority in his or her province.

In a referendum on electoral reform, the Constitution would offer little firm guidance. Parliament would have to decide whether the sought-after majority should include majorities in every region of the country. Quebec for one would likely insist on the latter.

The Conservatives believe the first-past-the-post system serves their party best. In the face of overwhelming popular pressure for a referendum, they figure Trudeau would abandon his bid to change the voting system rather than put it to a pan-Canadian vote. They may well be right. The option of a national referendum is a can of worms that any moderately sane government would think twice before opening.

ROSEMARY WESTWOOD

No one has to like Hillary, but we need to respect what her success means

Women have grown tired of "the first female."

Of course we celebrate our sisters' success, but it's a title so dated it feels sexist in itself, a stubborn hangover from the '50s.

We continue to use it out of necessity. Because even in a world where we can now do so much, sexism clings like that gropey, persistent perv at the bar.

As of Tuesday, Hillary Clinton is the first female presidential nominee of a major U.S. political party. Let me repeat: A woman could soon be president of the United States of America. That is not just monumental, and historic, it's the motherlode of "first female" headlines.

As John Cassidy in The New Yorker put it: "This was still a huge night for her, for the Democratic Party, and for the country."

Clinton herself clearly felt it — the elated atmosphere of that moment, taking the stage, happy and relaxed. The victory "belongs to generations of women and men who struggled and sacrificed and made this moment possible," she said. The one person she wishes she could share it with, she told The New York Times, is her mother.

The moment, let's note again, is that a group comprising one half the population finally has a shot at the seat of power in America, if not the world.

And yet, some Bernie Sanders supporters — and the entire right wing of the political world — appear unimpressed. Republicans are too partisan to pull support from even a raging racist, never mind celebrate one woman's achievement on behalf of millions of others. But Sanders' supporters? What's their excuse?

Those impassioned by Sanders' socialist revolution raged and rankled at the Associated Press' decision to declare Clinton the primary winner. The sexists attacked women journalists for reporting the news, calling NPR's Tamara Keith a "dumb c-t," Andrea Bernstein of WNYC a "whore" and HuffPost's Mollie Reilly "shrill."

Even the petty, reluctant Girl!Guess!mWith!Her hashtag, used by a lot of female Sanders supporters, suggests a group seemingly immune to history-in-the-making for women's equality.

Sanders supporters don't have to like Clinton. They don't have to vote for her. But is it really too much to ask for a modicum of respect for this once-unbelievable achievement? This one isn't about you. No really. This isn't about you. It's about all women.

Donald Trump, the presumptive racist, has welcomed dismayed Sanders supporters with "open arms." That raises a question really worth asking. If you can't recognize an unparalleled juncture for HALF the U.S. population, are you really that progressive? Or do you, after all, belong with Trump?

Trudeau has said a referendum is too blunt an instrument to do justice to complex reforms. There was a time when his party believed otherwise.

Bringing East Coast vibes to pop music

Clothes Off singer Ria Mae has found confidence in making pop music. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

INTERVIEW

Singer Ria Mae hasn't forgotten her Halifax roots

Ria Mae would have called herself a folk singer just a few years ago, but lately she's made a deep commitment to the world of pop.

The soft-spoken performer found her spark in a collaboration with rapper Classified, a fellow Halifax native who has become one of her greatest supporters.

He produced her new album and helped Mae — who did away with her real last name MacNutt — find a more confident voice in the process.

"I just wanted to have more fun with it," the singer says of making music.

"Coming from the East Coast, everyone has that traditional guitar-based, drums (sound) and I was listening to pop radio."

Mae can trace her decision to look beyond her folksy vibes, in part, to a Montreal getaway. A night out at the bars inspired last summer's saucy pop single Clothes Off.

The track's seductive bassline hooked Halifax radio programmers and eventually caught the ears of Toronto record executives, who swooped in and signed Mae for her self-titled second album.

Clothes Off went on to become a smash hit on the Canadian radio charts and grabbed a Juno nomination for single of the year — a category based on sales — alongside songs by Justin Bieber, Drake and the Weeknd.

It was a sudden burst of good fortune for an artist who wasn't exactly primed for a life of fame.

Mae was a reclusive teenager who locked herself away in her bedroom as she scribbled down song lyrics and taught herself how to play guitar. Her anti-social rituals hardly concerned her relatives who were avid players in the arts community.

Unlike them, the 14-year-old Mae was only writing songs for herself in those days.

"I was super shy and just kept it hidden," she says. "I used to write about relationships but I never had one. It was just imagination stuff."

It wasn't until the final months before high school graduation that Mae finally stepped before a crowd to play her music.

While she remembers that moment fondly, her priorities quickly shifted once she entered the working world.

Instead of chasing her musical dreams, Mae put on a hard hat and took a position in construction management. Eventually it became clear to her that she shouldn't have made her creative side a low priority.

So Mae quit her job and adjusted her finances to raise enough money to record her first EP.

After gaining some traction on the Halifax music scene and doing some touring, she made plans to pitch a collaboration with Classified, one of the performers she admired in Halifax for his cunning ability to bring hip-hop to a pop audience.

The rapper was interested, to her surprise, and the two began crafting beats together. Eventually it led to him producing her album.

Mae figures the pairing would've never happened if it weren't for their shared local roots.

"(Halifax) makes for some really funny collaborations," she says. "If I grew up in Toronto I wouldn't necessarily be collaborating with the most famous hip-hop artist (in the city)."

Dallas Green reflects on Gord Downie's influence

Dallas Green has been thinking about how Gord Downie shaped him as a musician.

The City and Colour singer-songwriter learned with the rest of us on May 24 that the Tragically Hip frontman is battling terminal brain cancer. Green says he hopes to attend as many of the Hip's upcoming summer shows as his schedule allows, even though he'll be on the road himself for part of the season.

City and Colour play a series of dates across Canada over the next month and a half in support of the 2015 album If I Should Go

Before You. This week they perform a number of Alberta concerts before hitting up Regina on Sunday and Winnipeg on June 14. Other shows cover parts of Ontario, Quebec and the East Coast through late July.

You've called Downie a friend for years, and the two of you collaborated on the 2008 song Sleeping Sickness. What was it like working with one of Canada's most beloved songwriters?

He's the gold standard — the way he writes and cares about music and the way he cares about the song. When he came and sang on my record it was a monumental experience of not only how I wanted to continue as a Canadian songwriter, but as a person as well.

What was it like as a budding musician when the Hip was dominating Canadian radio stations and MuchMusic. Did that shape you as an artist?

They mean so much to just about everybody in Canada, but I think as far as Canadian musicians, it might be indescribable to say what they mean to me and people like me, especially my age. I'm a little younger than they are, so I (was) growing up when they're taking over Canada. If you're a musician and you're born in Canada it's in your DNA to like the Tragically Hip.

You're well experienced with the road yourself, having played with hardcore band Alexisonfire for several years before going solo. How do you keep your live performances fresh?

It's the first Canadian tour on the new record so we have a whole bunch of songs to play live for the first time, which is important for me. We're musicians so you can always breathe new life into an old song. I don't think I ever sing a song the same way twice because I don't know how to, in a sense. If I sing a song I wrote 10 years ago it's going to sound different because I'm a different person now — my voice is 10 years older.

TV STUDY

Netflix bingers watch just over two hours per day

When it comes to bingeing a series, Netflix members do not chill. In its first comprehensive look at bingeing habits, Netflix has found that on average, members who completed the first season of a series did so in just one week by watching a little over two hours a day.

"I do think what you are seeing is that when you give members control over how slowly or how quickly that they want to watch their favourite shows, they're going to do it relatively quickly, if they're invested in the series," said Cindy Holland, Netflix's vice president of original content.

Series viewed more than two hours per day were identified as "devoured" and included high-energy narratives in the sci-fi, horror and thriller genres, like The Walking Dead, Sense8 and The Fall, which was the most devoured show globally. Binged series viewed less than two hours per day were considered "savoured." They included thought-provoking dramas and those with complex narratives, like House of Cards and Narcos, which was the most savoured series in Canada.

INTERVIEW

A five-part doc goes to air this week just after FX's hit series

A dramatized re-telling of the O.J. Simpson trial fascinated viewers earlier this year, but a new documentary series strives to bring the real story of the fallen football star to light.

The five-part, ESPN-produced O.J.: Made in America will test whether audiences are eager to sit through another extended examination of Simpson's torrid life. It's a question that has plagued director Ezra Edelman ever since he first heard about FX's smash hit series The People v. O.J. Simpson.

Edelman's approach is an entirely different take. It sets aside the tabloid headlines and digs into the details of Simpson's upbringing and hugely successful sports career, juxtaposed against the social and racial pressures of Los Angeles.

O.J.: Made in America begins Saturday on CTV and will air it in five parts throughout the following week. It has already been garnering rave reviews and could be in the running for both Oscar and Emmy nominations.

Edelman talked about releasing his project in the shadow of a hit TV series.

What was your initial reaction to hearing about The People v. O.J. Simpson?

What would your reaction be if you were working on a long piece and heard someone was doing something (on) the same topic and as long? That was my reaction. Not happy?

This still from the new documentary shows O.J. Simpson. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS/FILE

Theoretically it could draw more attention to your film.

Maybe and hopefully. I don't really look at it that way. There's no doubt there's been a resurgence in interest in the story and O.J. I would've liked people to have ... discovered the story for the first time through (my) film. That's the only frustrating part. My hope is someone wants to actually devote (time) to the subject.

You sound skeptical that will happen.

I'm skeptical about everything. It's already a lot to ask somebody to watch something that is 10 hours long (with commercials), so you're asking someone to do it twice about the same thing? I'm not at all skeptical about the value of our film.

I think it's worthy and should be seen by as many people (as possible). I didn't watch the (FX) series.

Do you plan to watch it?

Maybe later. The way my brain works it just wouldn't be good for me. There are things you can do when you have dramatic licence that you can't do in documentary form.

You can sort of delve deeper into characters' relationships, (something) I would be interested in doing, but can't do. I want people to discover who he is through watching a (documentary) about him. I would like the conversation that has happened (already) to have happened because we did the film, not because somebody did a 10-hour fictionalized version of it.

WHAT I'M WATCHING

Private Eyes is full of fun banter

THE SHOW: Private Eyes, Season 1, Episode 1 (Global)
THE MOMENT: The cutlets

Ex-hockey star Matt Shade (Jason Priestly) meets private investigator Angie Everett (Cindy Sampson) in her messy office. She's just been undercover as a fitness trainer, and wears a tank top that plays up her enormous bosom.

"Gotta say, that trainer disguise is a winner," Shade says.

"Gotta say, you hockey players are predictable — at any age," Angie shoots back. She catches him still eyeing her rack.

"Put your hands out," she says. She whips silicon falsies (aka cutlets) out of her bra and slaps them into his palms.

"Predictable again," he says.

"I had that kid in the palm of my hand until you showed up," she chides him.

He smacks the cutlets together. "Oh, is that what you call these?" he snarks.

Full disclosure, a producer of this show is a friend of mine, so I'll tell you what I asked her: Have TV directors figured out a trick to make Toronto look fantastic, or has the city actually become smashing? Between this show and Sensitive Skin, with its beauty shots from and of Toronto Island, the Big Smoke is displaying enough swoony, glittery angles to give Vancouver a run for its production dollars. Private Eyes makes the Gardiner Expressway look sexy, and that is saying something. Obviously, as the episodes roll on, Angie will teach Shade the P.I. ropes, and his ex-pro status will get her through posh doors. But cases-shmases.

This show will live or die on its leads' rat-a-tat repartee.

Johanna Schneller is a media connoisseur who zeroes in on pop-culture moments. She appears Monday through Thursday.

ANTHOLOGY

Graphic stories of the grotesque

Cinema Purgatorio
BY: Alan Moore and Kevin O'Neill
PUBLISHER: Avatar Press

Mike Donachie
 Metro | Canada

Yes, that's a picture of a man getting his arm cut off. It's mild by the standards of the people behind this book.

This is where it gets really weird. In Cinema Purgatorio, Alan Moore, the legendary writer behind Watchmen, V For Vendetta and so much more, reunites with League of Extraordinary Gentlemen co-conspirator Kevin O'Neill for a horror-themed story that's difficult to describe. Moore set the tone with a bizarre YouTube monologue, filmed in a darkened, tatty cinema.

It's just one part of this anthology series, presented in nifty soft-back-with-a-spine form, and filled with the work of people like Preacher writer Garth Ennis and World War Z novelist Max Brooks. Again, much of it defies description, but it draws inspiration from everything from Lovecraft to Pokemon, and none of it is particularly pleasant.

Cinema Purgatorio issue 2 is due out this week, and part one can still be found, if you're brave enough.

Rowling swears fans to secrecy

The curtain has risen on Harry Potter's latest adventure — and J.K. Rowling is urging fans not to ruin the magic by letting its secrets out. Harry Potter and the Cursed Child has had its first preview at London's Palace Theatre, with audience members given buttons urging them to #keep-these-secrets. The drama picks up the story 19 years after the climax of Rowling's last Potter novel. Its characters include the adult Harry and his younger son, Albus Severus Potter, a student at Hogwarts school. The plays officially open on July 30.

Prolonging adolescence in true Gen-X fashion

NEW NOVEL

Tension in Modern Lovers comes from author's past

Sue Carter
 For Metro Canada

If there's something wonderfully familiar about Emma Straub's new novel Modern Lovers, thank Jane Austen. Her book may be a contemporary Gen-X story set in a gentrifying Brooklyn neighbourhood, but there's a tenderness and charm to Straub's characters that wouldn't feel out of place among Austen's social comedies.

"Jane Austen is someone who I think about when I'm writing, specifically love stories," says Straub. "I do think about her a lot in terms of structure and pace."

Initially, Straub, who grew up in Brooklyn, planned to write a book focusing on Harry, a quiet "good kid" who initially causes his parents no grief but stealthily gains his independence.

The story grew to include more details about his mother, Elizabeth, a formerly rebellious musician who now sells real estate, and his father, Andrew, a directionless trust-fund baby who becomes involved with a cultish yoga studio.

Then Straub found herself writing more about their relationships with friends and neighbours, and so the story expanded to include Zoe and Jane, who own a local bistro, and their daughter, Ruby, whom Harry begins sleeping with.

Much of the tension in Modern Lovers originates from an era about 25 years in the past, back to when Elizabeth, Andrew and Zoe performed in a college rock band called Kitty's Mustache.

The fourth member, Lydia, went on to become famous, in part thanks to a Riot Grrrl-ish anthemic song written by Elizabeth. Although Lydia died from a drug overdose at age 27 — the same age that Amy Winehouse, Jim Morrison and Janis Joplin passed away — her cultish legacy and a personal secret continues to haunt the group.

"I didn't want to model her too closely on anyone but in my head Lydia is a female Kurt Cobain," says Straub, who claims to have no musical abilities, though she worked for the indie band The Magnetic Fields for a decade selling merch.

In many ways, Straub's hormone-fuelled teenage characters have as much control over their emotional lives as the 40-something adults who are all struggling with issues of identity, security and creative fulfillment.

Does how you relate to your loved ones change as you become entrenched in middle age? What happens when the cool touchstones of your youth become relegated to foggy memories and retro nights?

"That generation is also the first generation to reject outright adulthood in a certain way," says Straub.

"The baby boomers really were all about being adults having steady feet. Generation X is the first to really prolong adolescence, and that is certainly the case for my characters."

Despite whatever turmoil Straub's characters find themselves in, it's clear that in her world, family rules. While writing her 2014 best-selling novel The Vacationers, she was pregnant with her first child, and is now touring Modern Lovers (including a date at Toronto's Appel Salon on June 13), with her four-month-old son.

"I think about my family all day, every day, and that certainly has affected the way I think about my characters and their lives and their families," says Straub. "Nothing drives me more than my relationships with my family. And so it seems natural that would be the case with my books, too."

Sue Carter is the editor at Quill & Quire magazine.

Binge on summer theatre

Luminato celebrates 10 years with an 11-hour historical epic

Toronto's Luminato Festival celebrates its 10th anniversary this summer. To mark the occasion, the festival is mounting an epic theatrical trilogy: The James Plays.

Comprised of three full-length shows — 7.5 hours in total, plus breaks for lunch and dinner — The James Plays tempt theatre-goers to binge-watch the entire series, much as they might devour a full season of HBO's Game of Thrones in a single sitting or see them individually over several days. It's the only North American stop for the plays, produced by the National Theatre of Scotland, which chronicle three generations of kings who ruled Scotland during the perilous 15th century.

The plays will be staged at the iconic Hearn Generating Station in the city's east end. Jorn Weisbrodt, Luminato's artistic director, says the concrete floors and structural steel inside the decommissioned power plant is the perfect environment for the tension and conflict in the stories. To transform the unique 400,000-square-foot space to include a temporary 1,200-seat venue, massive shipping containers were hauled in, some of which will house seating.

For Weisbrodt, who is leaving the festival following the season to join husband Rufus Wainwright in New York, the production is a dream realized after first seeing it performed in London in 2014.

"IT'S THE PERFECT PLAY"

— Jorn Weisbrodt,
Luminato's artistic director

"It's the perfect play to bring to Toronto in my last year," he says. "The grandeur of the space is going to heighten the experience in a significant way. Bringing the audience on a physical adventure, bringing them to experience this place, is an adventure of the mind. The James Plays do that. People want to be immersed and to have that total experience."

Weisbrodt hopes the iconic Hearn will continue hosting artistic and cultural events in the future. "The Hearn is definitely something I am most proud of," he says. "Toronto could really create something unique."

5 BOOKS FOR ANIMAL LOVERS TO WALLOW IN

The birds and the bees, in addition to dogs, goats and pigs, plus sundry other creatures are the leading characters in these latest releases. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

1 Social media

Esther the Wonder Pig: Changing the World One Heart at a Time, Steve Jenkins and Derek Walter with Caprice Crane. This is the memoir of Ontario's own Esther the Wonder Pig, who was adopted in 2012 by Jenkins and Walter as a "micro" pig but soon revealed herself to be a full-size commercial sow who today weighs in at 300 kilos. This amiable book details the early days — failed attempts to housetrain Esther (the sheer volume of pee rules this out) and the dawning realization that they had to figure out alternative strategies for maintaining a porker as a pet. Esther's celebrity breakthrough came when Jenkins and Walter gave her a social media presence. Now she has more than 380,000 likes on Facebook and 185,000 followers on Instagram.

2 Travel

Dog Gone: A Lost Pet's Extraordinary Journey and the Family Who Brought Him Home, Pauls Toutonghi. How often have we read the story of a missing dog or cat that has returned to its family many miles away weeks or months later? This is that story, but this family memoir is more than that, thanks to the storytelling gifts of Pauls Toutonghi, the brother-in-law of Field Marshall, whose golden lab, Gonker, went missing in October, 1998, on the Appalachian Trail.

3 Curiosity

GoatMan: How I Took a Holiday from Being Human, Thomas Thwaites. Thomas Thwaites's last venture into the outer reaches of first-person journalism was The Toaster Project in which he figured out how to make a toaster from scratch. In GoatMan, he sets out how to become a goat from scratch. Well, actually, he started out attempting to be an elephant but switched species because of the rarity of pachyderms in his neck of the wood, i.e. England.

4 Science

The Dancing Bees: Karl von Frisch and the Discovery of the Honeybee Language, Tania Munz. This is an unexpectedly interesting book with a dual purpose. It tells the story of Jewish scientist Karl von Frisch (1886-1982) who the Nazis prevented from working with European bees and then compelled him to do so when a collapse of the bee population threatened the pollination of crops and thus the food supply.

5 Memoir

One Wild Bird at a Time: Portraits of Individual Birds, Bernd Heinrich. Heinrich lives in a cabin with large windows in all directions in a clearing in the Maine woods, with lots of berries, seeds and insects — which accounts for his relationships with hawks, vireos, chickadees and grosbeaks, among others. They have become his long-time neighbours, annual visitors or casual drop-ins. Indeed, some have actually homesteaded in his cabin walls.

Designers share their hottest kitchen looks

Duncan McAllister
For Metro Canada

Today's kitchen has evolved into a central meeting place for socializing and entertaining. You spend a lot of time there, so why not transform your kitchen into something out of the ordinary?

Metro tours the King East Design District this week, starting with the Bulthaup Toronto showroom, makers of custom-crafted kitchens from Germany.

Bulthaup principal Stefan Sybydlo explained the straightforward choice of three levels of offerings: B1, B2 and B3, ranging from entry-level to high-end.

The products feature elegant but simple clean lines. Each kitchen unit is custom-made to order with a modular mix-and-match approach. The units have a solid, quality look with rich finishes like smoked oak and dark aluminum.

The B2 product, perfect for condos, includes the innovative Workbench and Tool Cabinet products.

Many smaller-sized condos have limited counter space. Unlike a kitchen island, which is a solid structure that takes up room, the Workbench is just that — a bench, with open space underneath.

It therefore satisfies the first

Wolf and Sub-Zero appliances, pictured up top and bottom left, are a very popular package in condos. Bottom right: The Bulthaup Tool Cabinet is an innovative way to save space and think about your kitchen items. CONTRIBUTED commandment of small space design: thou shalt have multiple uses. It serves as an extra kitchen counter during meal prep, and when cleared off, can be used as a serving table as well. There's even room underneath to stow a couple of stools.

Being European, Bulthaup is designed with small space in mind.

"(Canadian) kitchens are about three times as big as the average Dutch kitchen," says Sybydlo.

Next door is Maroline Inc., Canadian distributor of Sub-Zero and Wolf appliances, popular with new condos across the GTA.

"A lot of builders, if they're launching a new project, they'll advertise a standard Sub-Zero-Wolf appliance package," says showroom manager Reggie Berrigan.

The first thing we saw was the Strauss Water countertop water purification system from Israel. The apple-shaped units come in a variety of bold colours and dispense nonstop hot, cold and boiling water on demand. "This is the alternative to the big five-gallon water jug or the Brita filter," says Berrigan.

On the Wolf cooking appliance side, here is something that all you DIY foodies will love. It's a combination convection-steam oven. These sleek units are flush mounted into your kitchen wall.

"It cooks either strictly with steam, if you want to steam vegetables, rice or fish, or straight convection cooking," explains Berrigan.

"What makes it really fascinating is the combination of steam and convection cooking at the same time."

WEAVING

Woven bedspreads, blankets part of our modern heritage

For decades, family-owned businesses across the U.S. have produced bedspreads and coverlets created with mechanical looms at their own mills. Made out of natural cotton or wool, in muted hues, these bedspreads and blankets are modern-day heirlooms passed down over generations.

"We get emails to this day from couples who've had their Bates bedspread since the '50s, when they got married. A woman told me, 'My bedspread lasted longer than my marriage,'" said Bianca Cloutier, 29, vice-president of sales and marketing for Maine Heritage Weavers.

The company's woven bedspreads and coverlets have old-school names such as Cape Cod, featuring a '70s coastal shell theme, and Martha Washington's Choice, in colours including maroon and sage green. That popular intricate design — with loops of chenille cotton pulled upward from the fabric to make raised flower patterns — is based on a 1940s Bates design recreated from a bedspread that George Washington chose for his wife when they married.

A woman told me, 'My bedspread lasted longer than my marriage.'

Bianca Cloutier, Maine Heritage Weavers

Also, search for online weaving communities and classes, and invest in a small and simple hand loom.

"While a loom is a machine, it takes a craftsman to use it," says Bob Christnacht, vice-president of global sales for the 153-year-old Portland, Ore.-based Pendleton, a blanket, bedding and clothing company that boasts six generations of family ownership.

"Weaving is very visceral and emotional, and part of our human heritage," Christnacht said.

"Your bed, too, is a very personal place, and there's an emotional and personal obligation to it." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The key to having flowers from spring through to the fall is planning ahead and choosing carefully. MARKCULLEN.COM

Make the love last in your garden

FLOWERS

From hellebores to yarrow, here's what to plant

Mark Cullen
For Torstar News Service

With a little planning when it comes to planting certain flowers, gardeners can have blooms from spring to October.

Everyone loves to see colourful blossoms in the garden. But in admiring their beauty, we forget why flowers bloom in the first place: to attract pollinators.

Most of the activity in your garden, associated with the web of nature, hinges on sex and reproduction. Keep that in mind this summer when you're out at night and hear crickets chirping, toads croaking and myriad other sounds of love.

So why not make the love last? You can do it with a succession of blooming plants lighting up every corner of your garden, patio or balcony from early spring to late fall.

This is planting season and there's no better time to plan your garden for a symphony of colour. I am here to help map it all out:

Late spring (June)

My favourite late-spring flowering plants include woody shrubs such as forsythia, lilacs, magnolias, flowering cherries, crabapples and the native serviceberry (which can grow 10 metres). Perennial flowering groundcovers include lily of the valley, sweet woodruff, lamium and periwinkle.

Longer-blooming perennials include bergenia, which grows about 30 centimetres and features light pink or purple/red flower clusters. Honey bees forage here frequently. Also, bleeding heart (pink/red), columbine (a magnet for hummingbirds) and peonies are wonderful for cutting and fragrance.

Early summer

Nature knows most insect activity in the garden picks up in late June, July and early August and as a result she has planned things nicely: this is the most intense flowering period in the garden.

Perennials that flower most reliably, for the longest period of time and attract the greatest number of pollinators, include:

• Astilbe: A fabulous plant that tolerates some shade and grows in sunny spots when mulched generously (it doesn't like to dry out). Cut it for use indoors and leave some standing to attract honey bees and other pollinators. Astilbe will bloom for up to six weeks in red, pink or white.

• Campanula: Varieties are available from dwarf 20-centimetre bloomers ("Blue Chips") to 60-centimetre plants featuring a long stem of silver-blue flowers ("Summertime Blues"). This is a reliable perennial that comes back for years.

• Coneflower (echinacea):

This is one of my favourite Canadian native plants. I have about 50 of them in my garden, but I only grow the original purple coneflower. As my associate Sonia Day has pointed out, the hybrids too often pop out after a season or two.

Fall

September and October feature their own major players. Plant Sedum spectabile for two months of colour and honey-bee activity.

Rudbeckia provides reliable yellow colour from late August to when frost arrives (no wonder gas stations love to use this plant, it is so low maintenance). Joe Pye weed (I love this plant for butterflies and honey bees), butterfly bush (No. 1 for butterflies in my books!), yarrow and giant flowering rose mallow will knock your eyes out.

Everything a home should be

LEGAL MATTERS

Call the deal off over bad foundation

Jeffrey Cowan
For Metro | Canada

Q: I am scheduled to purchase a home and the home inspector noted that there were some minor cracks in the foundation that he thought might warrant further research. As the home was the one we've been searching for over the past few months we waived the home inspection condition and made the offer 'firm'. We later visited the house and on closer inspection of the foundation under an addition, we discovered some major cracks and had a foundation specialist examine the footing, who estimates there is $50,000 to $60,000 in work needed. This amount represents one-fifth of the total purchase price. What do we do now?

A: Focusing on just the foundation problems, you have discovered there are major problems that go to the fundamental safety of the home. Regardless of whether you discovered this before the inspection condition was waived or within the final hours before you closed, the risk involved in the building lies with the vendor. With such a large problem, my litigation counsel says you have a number of options: you can get the vendor to fix the problem (not possibly the best result); you can get an abatement in the purchase price in order to cover the costs or lastly, and perhaps the best result, you should be able to cancel the agreement because the nature of the problem is so fundamental as to negate the contract because you are not purchasing what you thought you were getting (a solid, well-constructed home).

You should meet with your lawyer and get this matter sorted as soon as possible.

When a problem is so fundamental that it affects the basic safety and structure of your home, your best bet may be to call the whole thing off. ISTOCK

GTA builders go beyond borders

Bryan Tuckey
For Metro Canada

Most of the companies building homes and developing land in the GTA are locally-owned and operated businesses. They are based here and have their head offices here. The owners not only invest in the GTA and employ people who live, work and play here, but they themselves live here and call this region home.

This is true for small and medium-sized firms and it is also the case for the larger development companies that you may recognize, like Tridel, Great Gulf, Mattamy Homes and others.

Many of our industry's companies are multi-generational, family-owned enterprises that have been helping to build cities in the GTA for decades. They have deep roots in the community and many of these companies and the people who lead them have a long history of giving back.

Having so many industry leaders based here is different from most industries — think food, pharmaceutical, and even beer — where the largest companies that come to mind are multi-national corporations with headquarters outside of Canada. Some of them started out as Canadian companies but over the years have been bought out by others outside of our borders.

Our industry has remained rooted in the GTA and is in fact expanding elsewhere. Some of the region's top builders and developers are now building across Canadian and in the U.S. but they are still based here.

For instance, Great Gulf Homes, named one of BILD's Home Builders of the Year just a few months ago for building more than 40,000 new homes across Ontario since its inception in 1975, has taken its expertise across the nation and into the U.S.

The company has projects ranging from master-planned communities to high-rise condominiums underway in nine major U.S. cities from Atlanta to Denver.

There are also many other builders like BILD members Ri-oCan and Dream Unlimited Corporation that have head offices in the GTA but have development projects in various provinces across the country.

We are fortunate that the homebuilding and land development industry is firmly rooted in the GTA and this region benefits when firms who work elsewhere keep their headquarters here.

Dickey wins an ugly one

BLUE JAYS

Knuckleballer gets by with sub-par stuff, backed by bats

On most nights during the Blue Jays' after-game rehash, R.A. Dickey will describe with chagrin how his knuckleball was really dancing that game and that the result — often a loss — was not a reflection of the quality of his specialty pitch. Things will even out, he argues. That's why it was so unusual to listen to him following Wednesday's 7-2 victory in Detroit.

"Let's put it this way, I think my best pitch today was a pick-off to first base," Dickey said. "It was probably as big of a grind as I've had in a number of years. I was pulling on the reservoir of experience that I've had over the last 10 years to try to manage the game in some way. I threw all-conventional (pitches) one inning. I was changing speeds on my knuckleball more than I ever have. I threw curveballs today. I was doing everything I could do to keep us in the game."

Dickey lasted until the sixth inning, when manager John Gibbons lifted him from the game

WEDNESDAY In Detroit

with one out and a Tiger on first base. Dickey was leading 7-2 and had thrown just 97 pitches, but they weren't easy. There were certainly key moments in the win that Dickey believes saved his outing. The pickoff of Jose Iglesias, plus a glove play and one other pitch.

"Three plays saved the game for us," Dickey said. "One was the groundout by (Miguel) Cabrera to lead off an inning and (Josh) Donaldson made an incredible play. Then the pickoff, first and third, one out. That was a huge play in a game where they had some momentum.

And then I was able to make one pretty good pitch to Castellanos (with two on in the fifth). Those were few and far between for me today. But it's satisfying. Sometimes you pitch great and you don't get the results."

In the meantime, the top two batters in the Jays' lineup turned it around from less than 24 hours earlier. Bautista and Donaldson, after going hitless in a heartbreaking Tuesday night loss, combined for five hits, two doubles, a triple, a home run, four runs and three RBIs. Donaldson singled, homered and tripled in his first three plate appearances, coming up a double shy of the cycle that only Kelly Gruber and Jeff Frye have accomplished for the Jays. Donaldson grounded out in his fourth at-bat and was left in the on-deck circle at game's end.

+ MACHADO'S STATUS FOR TORONTO

Manny Machado charged the mound Tuesday and laid a punch on the Royals' Jordano Ventura, a response to a 99 m.p.h. bean ball which will almost certainly prompt baseball operations to hand the O's third baseman a suspension.

Whatever the length may be — and it could be five games or more — Machado is likely to appeal, and therefore make himself available for a four-game series in Toronto against an important, East Division opponent.

Sharapova gets 2-year ban

TENNIS
Barring appeal, Russian will miss Olympics, 8 Slam events

Maria Sharapova was suspended Wednesday for two years for failing a drug test, labelled "the sole author of her own misfortune" because she hid regular pre-match use of a newly banned substance from anti-doping authorities and members of her own entourage.

The Russian said she would

Sharapova is one of 10 women in tennis history with a career Grand Slam.

appeal what she called "an unfairly harsh" punishment to the Court of Arbitration for Sport.

The ban, handed down by a three-person Tennis Anti-Doping Program tribunal appointed by the International Tennis Federation, is backdated to Jan. 26, when Sharapova last played. She tested positive for meldonium that day after losing to Serena Williams in the Australian Open quarter-finals. The panel said various elements of Sharapova's case "inevitably lead to the conclusion" she took the substance "for the purpose of enhancing her performance."

Sharapova, who faced up to a four-year ban, loses all ranking points and prize money she earned in Melbourne.

Her suspension runs through Jan. 25, 2018, meaning the 29-year-old will wind up missing this year's Olympics and a total of eight Grand Slam tournaments during prime competitive years.

RECIPE Sweet Potato and Kale Frittata

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh
For Metro Canada

You can't beat the appeal of eggs for dinner and but we gave this hearty dish a nutritional one-two punch thanks to the help of kale and sweet potato.

Ready in
Prep time: 20 minutes
Cook time: 20 minutes

- Ingredients
- 1 Tbsp butter
 - 1 yellow onion, chopped
 - 1 pound frozen chopped kale
 - 3 cloves garlic, chopped
 - 2 cups boiled diced sweet potato (about 1 large potato)
 - 6 eggs
 - 2 Tbsp milk
 - 1 tsp fresh, chopped parsley

Directions

1. Preheat oven to 400 F. In an ovenproof skillet, melt butter over medium heat. Add onions and cook until soft, about 5 minutes. Add garlic and kale and cook until garlic fragrant and kale wilted.

2. Add potatoes and soften, about 3 to 5 minutes.

3. Meanwhile, whisk eggs and milk. Pour egg mixture over potatoes and kale, and cook on stovetop another 3 minutes. Sprinkle with parsley.

4. Transfer skillet to oven and bake about 6 to 8 minutes or until eggs are set.

★ IT'S ALL IN THE STARS Your daily horoscope by Francis Drake

Aries March 21 - April 20
Don't get carried away with disputes about money, inheritances and shared property. Will an argument really change anything? Stay calm, and rely on logic instead of a hot temper.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
Difficulties with spouses, partners and close friends are likely today, because Mercury is in your sign, opposing fiery Mars. (Yikes!) This means people are ready to fight!

Gemini May 22 - June 21
You are mentally restless today; however, you can use this energy for research or to seek out answers to problems. Focus your search in one area.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
Difficulties with a friend or perhaps a member of a group might arise today. Basically, it's a gun fight at the O.K. Corral. Who has the biggest weapon?

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
Difficulties with authority figures are likely today, which is why this is a poor day to ask for approval or permission for anything. Just keep a low profile and don't go looking for trouble.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Avoid controversial subjects like politics, religion and racial issues today, because they will quickly deteriorate into a nasty argument. Mostly, this is because people want to fight.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
Disputes about inheritances and shared property are likely today. This is a poor day for these kinds of discussions; therefore, wait for a better day.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Difficulties with partners and close friends are likely today because fiery Mars is in your sign opposing Mercury, which is directly opposite you. Chill out.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Squabbles with co-workers or people related to your job are likely today. However, it takes two to make a fight, right? Therefore, refuse to engage. Time to go fishing.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Be patient with kids today, because they are just as likely to quarrel as you are. Knowing this, direct people's attention to things you have in common.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Avoid family disputes today, because it's just not worth it. Family is gold. Every time you have family dissension, everyone loses.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
This is a mildly accident-prone day, because you might be emotionally upset about something. Just keep calm and carry on. Truer words were never spoken. An agitated mind will lead to accidents.
